

Clarinet Jokes (or ARE they?)

An oboist noticed at the end of each rehearsal break, one of the clarinetists would look at the inside flap of his jacket before he sat down to resume rehearsal. This continued for several years, and the oboist became quite curious about it.

One day, during hot weather, the clarinetist took off his jacket and went off on break. The oboist waited until everyone was off the platform, looked around, and sneaked over to the jacket.

---

He pulled back the flap and saw a little note pinned on the inside. It read: "left hand top, right hand bottom."
